I am writing to express my concerns regarding net metering.

If people pass on excess power to the grid why shouldn't they receive something in return? Do electricity companies want to deny themselves this resource?

The act would greatly diminish the right of individuals to generate their own power, in a state that prides itself on individualism.

It reduces strain on the grid during peak times.

The alleged disadvantages to power companies is not clearly established.

It would reduce the benefits brought to the state by the Inflation Reduction Act.

Thank you, I hope you have received this in time.
