Gentlemen,

We work with a number of public and non-profit clients who have a great deal of interest in renewable energy. They are highly motivated to reduce the carbon footprints of their projects and are extremely motivated to do the right thing. They are very frustrated that they can get some tax incentives for such strategies for their homes but nothing is available for their organization where the impact may even be greater.

A mechanism of rebates and/or grants for such clients would go a long way toward demonstrating viable ways alternative energies can be integrated into commercial projects and begin to have a real impact on their use.

Dennis
